

INTERIOR DESIGN YEARBOOK 2014

WRITERS INCLUDE:

TARA BERNERD

TAMARA MAGEL

KATHARINE POOLEY

BRITISH INSTITUTE OF INTERIOR DESIGN

EDITED BY JADE TILLEY

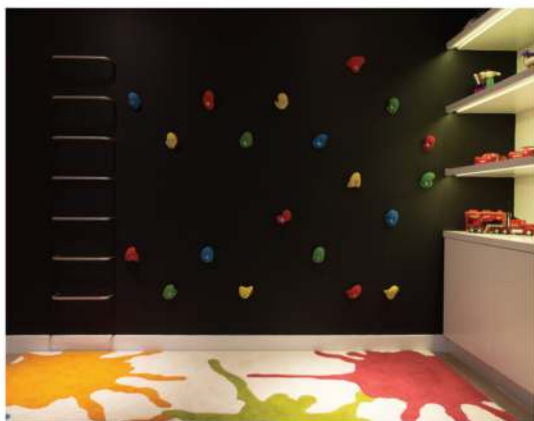

Published in association with the
British Institute of Interior Design

PLAY TIME

An enormous amount of time and effort was placed on the design of the children's bedrooms and playroom for this project, as the client wanted an interactive and playful area, in addition to the bedrooms, for her young sons to play. The playroom, located in the basement of the property, connects with the enclosed rear garden. This allows the children the ability to play in an environment inside and out, without causing chaos all over the house by running up and down the stairs from their bedrooms to the garden. With the joinery falling within the architect's remit, a blank canvas of white was created in the playroom against which Roselind and her team could inject a burst of colour to make the room a vibrant and fun place to play. This was achieved by the use of an oversized bespoke wallpaper of dripping paint, easily applied to any size wall, injecting colour without feeling too busy. Cleverly, the fixed finishes were kept white so that the colours could be adapted as the children grow older.

Holland Park, West London, was designed by Roselind Wilson of Roselind Wilson Design and completed in April 2013.

Photography by Ephraim Muller.

